They had a son, Harry Rushworth, born in 1894 and died of wounds on 16th August 1917. Tom was a single man who was educated at Dewsbury Moor Board School and worked in the woollen mill of Messrs Priestley and Company, Littletown, Liversedge.

He served as Private 41286 in the 2nd Battalion Kings Own Yorkshire Light Infantry. He died of wounds in No. 21 Casualty Clearing Station at Nesle, France on 5th April 1917; his company had been attacked two days previously near Savy, 6.5 kilometres west of the town of St. Quentin by German Planes who proceeded to throw bombs on the soldiers below. He was buried in Nesle Communal Cemetery, Somme, France. Tom was awarded the British War Medal and the Victory Medal.

Nesle is a village 20 kilometres south of Peronne. It was held by the Germans during the early part of the War, and occupied by French and British cavalry on 18th March 1917. On 25th March 1918 it was taken by the Germans, after severe fighting with French and British troops; but it was recaptured by the French on the following 28th August. From April to June 1917, No.21 Casualty Clearing Station was at Nesle, and the dead from it were buried in a plot near the West corner of the Communal Cemetery, between two German plots. In May 1918, four British soldiers were buried among these graves. There are now over 100, 1914-18 war casualties commemorated in this site. Of these, a small number are unidentified.

Tom is commemorated on the Dewsbury Cenotaph in Crow Nest Park and in the Dewsbury Roll of Honour kept in Dewsbury Central Library and on the War Memorial in St. John the Evangelist Church, Dewsbury Moor.
